“ Growing up, my uncle Brenton was the big brother I never had. Our big family all lived close to each other throughout all my childhood years and Brenton holds such a big space in those precious memories. Playing outside together in the 90's, he was someone I looked up to and someone I trusted to protect me, even in the funniest ways. I remember being a very serious small child, coming to Brenton, who was only a few years older than me, and telling him I found a grenade outside and I needed his help. I remember the fear when I told Brenton about this, who immediately helped me to inspect it and discover it was just an old firework. He thought it was hilarious and he would loooooove to give me crap about that when we were older. It was so funny to laugh about that together because it was such a huge memory from both of our childhoods. One that we shared together, just us, kids. He was such a prankster to me growing up. Doing the whole take-your-thumb-off things, but he stepped it up by throwing his cut off thumb(LEGO) at me while i screamed, mortified -- we laughed and laughed about these memories. I love you Brenton. These core memories will stay with me forever. your humor and kindhearted way about you will live on forever through the people who loved you and knew you for who you were. a good dad, a good husband, son, little brother, uncle, cousin. a good man. We love you. Too soon, but isnt it always? See you on the other side, and we will have another good laugh. I love you. Love, Shana

“ Brenton, I can remember sitting and watching the scrolling t.v. guide old school cable. We would end up watching for at least 4 to 6 hours, because he would keep missing his channel to see what was playing 🕒 what I would give for 1 more of t V guide with him. RIP brother! I love you fly high beautiful soul.
