“ Today has been 5 years since our beloved wife and mother died and our world ultimately changed forever. We both know what a Godly woman my mother was and our hearts are comforted knowing where she is. But that's not the problem. The problem is that in the 5 years she's been gone we both have missed her terribly, Especially my Dad. For those who truly knew my mom knew what a special relationship my parents had. They always said that it was God who put them together. Well now it's been 5 years and we miss her worse than we did when she died. People will say to you "time will heal" or "at least you know where she is" or something equally insensitive well I say to those people "You're Wrong! and you honestly need to just shut up!!" You need to stop telling someone who is grieving a lost loved one that nonsense, it doesn't help us at all! The pain doesn't get better it gets worse, because when a loved one first dies you are numb. You go through the motions. You get through the funeral, you bury that beloved one. Then you go home...alone. Everybody goes back to their life. But you don't. Because your life will never be the same because once you get passed the numbness, then the pain and the anger come. But then something even worse than all that comes and it never, ever goes away....The miss. As each day and every month, especially every year that passes the miss gets worse. Why you ask? Because you want to see that loved one, to talk to them, hug, kiss them, hear them talk or laugh but you can't. You will never be able to do any of those things ever again on this earth. So when you see or hear someone say they are missing someone who has gone on don't say to them "time will heal" or spout some other nonsense. And for those who are still blessed enough to have your spouse or your mother I say to you cherish them, love them. Tell them every chance you get that you love them. Because one day it will be too late. Dad and I wish for one more embrace, one more kiss, heck even one more argument! Moms are special women, yes they make mistakes but they love their children the best they know how. I miss my mom so much i still break down sobbing and it still feels like my chest is going to explode from the grief and I watch my Dad struggle on a daily basis grieving over his wife, his one true love, his soulmate. So today we will go to her grave and lay red roses but then we will go home alone. Because we are the ones still grieving and missing her after 5 years and forevermore.
