Learn to accept those people close to you for who they are and love them while you can. Don't find yourself wishing you had tried harder when there was still time.

I was always amazed with his wide circle of friends that he developed over a lifetime. It was a brotherhood of kinship and was there for him to the last day. His generosity will be his legacy as I have learned it touched a host of people throughout the years. He was unique, independent, his own man and someone who searched for the truth and the meaning of life. He was a man of integrity like his father before him. I loved him and will miss his persistent " Pat if you need anything just call."

Years ago there was a cook out at Dude's place of business.....A woman came in with a young girl and it was apparent the mother had been drinking.....It was the little girl's birthday.....Long story short, Claudie pulled out a wad of money, sent Jesse Smith to Land's bakery for a cake, and then across the street to the Dime store for some small presents..... That was Claudie.....

Claudie was one of my husbands best friends. After my husband Leon Walker died 3 years ago. Claudie would call to check on me every once in while. He would come to see Leon and what tales they had to tell, they were so many most people wouldn't believe them but most were really true They were just good old boys that's why we loved them. and no changing them. We never got to meet his wife and family In Fla but he talked about them all the time. we meet Shannon he was so proud on him. I wished I had known this in time to get off work to come pay my respects. I know what you are going though.
