“Where do I start.. My earliest memories as a child mostly start with being at my grandma's house. From many holidays spent at her house, all the toys I had spread across her living room, the little red rocking horse on the front porch. I was more than lucky to spend as much time with her as I did. She was always so uplifting to be around. No matter the mood you were in she would do her best to cheer you up, to be there for you, share her wisdom. She was always smiling and laughing. I never really seen her in a hospital and the one time I did was a couple of years ago when she had broke her ankle and even then all she did was laugh about it and make jokes through her whole recovery. She was never one to sit around and dwell or sulk on anything. She never took one day for granted. I think it's safe to say all of us get easily caught up in everything we have going on in our lives to really stop and remember you truly never know how long you have with someone. Tomorrow is never promised. For her age she was incredible shape. Even looking at her you would've never guessed she was a couple of years away from her 80's. She was never one to act her age. One of her favor sayings or expressions was "age is just a number". She was a hard worker and always determined in anything she wanted to do. She would do just about anything for anyone. She had a heart of gold. Always willing to strike up a conversation with anyone, stranger or not. I'll miss the days when I was bored and didn't have much to do and driving over to her house just to sit around and catch up. I'll forever be grateful she got to meet her great grandson (Easton), and spend the time with him she did. Oddly enough I've been typing this for going on 12 minutes now and I still can't think of a strong enough culmination of words to express how much I am going to miss not having her around. To just sit back and laugh with. To have an open set of ears to talk to when I feel like I have nobody else. To spend Christmas's and holidays with. Like I said in a previous comment on Facebook, and I can't stress it enough. She was just as much a friend as she was a grandparent. Even though I haven't fully grasped the idea of losing her yet and won't until Wednesday morning. You will always have a special place in my heart nannie. I will eternally be grateful for the time god gifted me to spend with you. You mean the world to me, and you always left a warm feeling in any life you came in contact with. You were one of a kind. Hug Austin and Pee-Paw real tight for me. I'll see y'all one day. I love you more than I could ever begin to describe.

“ It's hard to imagine not having Ms. Judy stop by Academy for Little People to visit with us. She was such a patient, loving and wonderful person to work with. She always had a kind word and bright smile. Ms. Judy loved so many babies and had the trust of so many parents for 15 years. We will miss her, but what a difference she made in so many lives.
