“ I am lighting the golf ball on the tee candle in memory of my uncle Raymond. I can remember him playing this strange game in his front yard surrounded by the white picket fence. It was the early 1970s in Detroit and I was around 9 or 10. I was unfamiliar with golf, but Raymond gave me my first lesson on how to hold a golf club and how to putt. Also, he taught me how to play Horseshoes, Tennis and Croquet.

Raymond was an interesting man who always had something innovative going on. He was very creative, keeping himself busy with new projects inside and outside the house. He was up on the latest electronic gadgets, games, toys, movies, sports gadgets, and cars. Being that he and Daddy worked at GM, the cars were usually a GM model.

If someone needed help, Raymond was willing to help. He was a quiet and soft-spoken man who appreciated family. He had a compassionate and generous spirit. He will be truly missed, but he was an angelic soul that needed to be returned to Heaven.
