“ I was introduced to Robert O, as everybody called him, in early 1990's. He was one of the most honest and trustworthy men I ever knew. He was a handyman extraordinaire. There was not a task I ever saw him undertake that he did not do to perfection. He became a friend and since he had been a ranger in Vietnam, he and my husband from WWII and Korea, they loved to talk together. He brought big rocks from his own place and built a wall around the back so my husband could go with his wheelchair to the backyard from the front. Just a tiny example of the man he was. He loved to joke and he will be sorely missed. Mary Roser
